Women Lead in the Fight Against AIDS

This magazine profiles a dynamic group of women on the front lines in the AIDS fight. Their stories help us understand how the pandemic affects the lives of women and their families, and the way forward.

Among the powerful stories and creative approaches highlighted:

- Irene Kpodo uses drama and play-acting to get audiences to discuss ways to avoid HIV/AIDS. At the Ghana Association of People Infected and Affected by HIV/AIDS, she educates families and teens, especially young women, in basic facts about how the disease is transmitted, its effects on the body and ways to cope with it at home. "I say I have had two lives," she said. "One without HIV and one with it."
- Zeenat Sultana, a physician for the Bangladesh Center for Communications Programs, hopes to keep HIV/AIDS rates low in Bangladesh by working with transport workers, migrants and other groups at high risk. "We are a poor country and a high level would be devastating for us," she said.

Integrating STDs and AIDS Services into Family Planning Programs: Training Community Workers

A five-day, 13-session training workshop to broaden family planning programs to meet additional reproductive health needs, field-tested in Kenya by more than 60 health care managers and community-based distributors. Topics include attitudes about STDs and HIV/AIDS, approaches to motivating behavior change, cultural and gender issues in counseling, communication and counseling skills, and content and confidentiality issues.

June 1995. 140 pages. English. US$20

Moments in Time: HIV/AIDS Advocacy Stories

This collection of stories developed by the POLICY Project highlights some of the key advocacy moments of our time as told from the unique perspective of those who are engaged in advocacy work in communities around the world. Despite the availability of several excellent guides to advocacy, no group or individual has developed a manual that offers a tapestry of stories as a practical resource for advocacy training, reflective learning, and strategic planning. This manual begins a process of documenting HIV/AIDS policy advocacy stories as a means of preserving them and making them available to others involved in HIV/AIDS advocacy issues.
